I've received it during job interviews, call-backs, as well as after rejection letters. I get it from friends, family, the odd stranger on the street, and the children who want to know why I spend so much time staring at trees. This phrase is the most commonly used, and probably most universal rejection response. But it only comes from a specific, limited perspective. "Blowing it" often implies that your actions are a reflection on you. Let's say you're an extremely talented musician. You spend hours and hours practising and learning and you love what you do. That's cool, but I'd say it's more than just a hobby. You're passionate about it, and I don't see how anyone could look at your art and not be in awe of what you're capable of. On the other hand, if you're someone who thinks you're the best person for the job, that's great, but now you need to prove that. Even if you have the skills and ability and you've worked very hard, the person you're pitching your ideas and asking for a job to is likely to not be impressed. If they

Q: scrapy java script spider running forever
I'm trying to run a simple spider using scrapy my spider file is as follows:

import scrapy from django.conf.urls.defaults import * from Products.models import * from TutorialSpider.tutorialspider import TutorialSpider def parse(self, response): self.log('hi') self.log('hello') yield { 'product_name':
response.css('a.product-title::text').extract_first(), 'product_description':
response.css('div.info::text').extract_first() } I used this code scrapy crawl Products -o items.csv -t json But then I find that the spider is running forever and is not finished. and it keeps generating output:
